

ABSTRACT

Individuals drinking champagne or wine may want to recall the name of the bottle for future reference. Unfortunately, unless someone has the presence of mind to write down the relevant details of the bottle somewhere and to then keep the details safe, until required, this information is usually lost with the passage of time. Steaming off the entire wine label is impractical. Usually, this problem is solved by ripping off the wine or champagne bottle label or keeping the cork. However, these solutions are impractical. This problem is solved by providing a bottle capsule or label incorporating a tag containing information, wherein the tag and capsule/label are so arranged as to permit separation of the tag from the capsule/label to form two disconnected sections, the section forming the tag retaining the information.

Fig 1